Title:” Open Science: status and prospectives”

Abstract:

Open Science is becoming a ubiquitous topic in many if not all scientific policy agendas of international and national agencies. Different working groups have been created under the auspices of G7, G20, UNESCO, European Union and national governments. Such institutions are all actively launching and running programmes to find a common approach that takes into account the very recent revolutionary changes in technology, communication, data and information creation, storage and distribution.

In this presentation I will briefly discuss the principles and present the status and prospective of Open Science in Italy.
